November 13, 2026 AER Market Dashboard: Flags 3 of 4: Green Flags 1 of 4 Latest close 2026-11-13

	Direction	Fundamental	Actual	Likely-Near-term Trend
Fixed-income:	10-yr Treasury rate	5.0%	5.2%	Upward
Equities:	S&P 500	4,500	7,562	Sideways

Weekly News

Markets finished the week with the S&P 500 at 7,562 through the latest available close (2026-11-13). The index is higher over the past five trading sessions while oil is lower, with WTI crude at $88.92.

Market Outlook

Gold remains firm near $3,888, confirming continued demand for inflation and risk protection. For now, equity momentum remains positive, but the mix of elevated valuations, firm gold, and volatile commodity prices argues for watching the dashboard closely.

Market Snapshot

Key Risks

A geopolitical shock could send oil higher.
Higher Treasury yields could delay Fed easing.
Elevated valuation leaves stocks exposed to disappointment.

Recent Developments

Through the latest available close (2026-11-13), the S&P 500 finished at 7,562. The index rose 2.5% over the past five trading sessions and fell 1.3% over the past month.

Interest-rate signals were steady to firmer, with the 10-year Treasury near 5.2%. Over the past month the yield rose 1.1%, keeping monetary policy in the slightly restrictive zone for the dashboard.

Commodity markets remain important to the inflation outlook. WTI crude ended near $88.92, down 2.1% for the week, while gold ended near $3,888, down 4.6%.

The AER Fear & Greed Monitor stands at 55.6/100, classified as Neutral. Livestock and grain futures point to easing near-term food-price pressure, so the report is watching whether commodity moves pass through to consumers.

What We Are Watching

Whether equity breadth keeps stabilizing the advance after the S&P 500's +2.5% weekly move.

The 10-year Treasury and whether yields keep firming, since the rate path remains central to valuation pressure and monetary-policy risk.

Commodity inflation signals, especially oil's pullback and gold's softer tone, for evidence that input-cost pressure is building or easing.

Whether the AER Fear & Greed reading holds near 55.6/100 (Neutral) or starts to show investor risk appetite cooling.

Easing pressure on retail food prices.

Food Price Outlook

Livestock and grain futures point to easing pipeline pressure for retail food prices. Over the past month, corn is lower, wheat is lower, soybeans are lower. These moves will influence feed costs and eventually pressure packaged foods. Meat-price signals are less uniform than the grain complex. The pass-through to grocery shelves is likely to be gradual rather than immediate.
